FOREWORD

The present need of reviving the coconut industry has made me think of a way by which the women of the country may help. Thus, these recipes on coconut were gathered from all over the Philippines. I present them herein for the use of our women and for the benefit of our nation.

Coconut is rich in fat, vitamins, and other valuable nutritive elements. Its daily use in our food will greatly benefit the health of our people and make of us a strong and sturdy race. Western nations pay millions of pesos for the use of our coconut products in their food whereas we who have them at hand do not avail ourselves of their value. Our children, while still young, should be educated to eat and like coconut just as American mothers have educated their children to eat apple and spinach. They should be taught the use of coconut and its by-products.

Doctor Child of the "Ceylon Research Schemes" says Ceylon imports little fat because the consumption of some 150 coconuts per head a year provides the biologically necessary amount of fat.

Coconut is among the lowest priced food available for the improvement of the Filipino diet. It is abundant everywhere in the Philippines. The poorest family can afford the one centavo to pay for a coconut fruit almost sufficient for its need for fat and vitamins. In this pamphlet, I desire to reach every housewife, so that, with these recipes in their hands, they may foster the use and consumption of the coconut product in their home and thus help the Philippines stabilize itself economically.
